

Dr. Matthew Levy is an emergency medicine and EMS physician and a decades-long member of Maryland's EMS community. He holds appointments at Johns Hopkins University as an Associate Professor of Emergency Medicine and Surgery, Associate Director of the Johns Hopkins Emergency Medical Services Fellowship, and Deputy Director of Operational Medicine. He is also a Clinical Associate Professor and the paramedic program Medical Director at the University of Maryland Baltimore County Department of Emergency Health Services. In addition, Dr. Levy is a Visiting Scholar at the National Center for Disaster Medicine and Public Health. His career in Emergency Medical Services began as an EMS clinician and spans nearly three decades. He currently serves as the Chief Medical Officer and EMS Medical Director of the Howard County Department of Fire and Rescue Services and the Central Maryland (Region III) EMS Medical Director for the State of Maryland. He is a Fellow of the American College of Emergency Physicians and a Fellow of the Academy of Emergency Medical Services. Dr. Levy is chair of the national non-profit Stop the Bleed Coalition and a member of the Scientific Advisory Council of the American Red Cross. He is a passionate educator and advocate for outcomes-driven prehospital care. He actively participates in various local, state, federal, and international organizations related to prehospital, operational, and disaster medicine.