

Lauren K. Rosenfeld, MD is a third year emergency medicine resident at George Washington University. She completed undergraduate training at the University of Oregon with major in Chinese and Chemistry, transitioned to New York where she completed a Masters in Education with the Teach For America program, and finished medical school at the University of Miami with a focus on Health Law. She serves on the board of ACEP both on the national level and for the local DC chapter. She is excited to transition into her final year of residency where she hopes to further develop her passions for education and health policy.